

Abstract of the Disclosure

A wireless LAN technology for reducing interference between (or among) wireless LAN access points is provided. A wireless LAN access point is provided with a directional antenna, an 5 interference detector detecting interference effected by another wireless LAN access point on the directional antenna, and a direction adjusting mechanism adjusting a maximum gain direction of the directional antenna in response 10 to the detected interference.